that has at last raised the banks and the mercantile community generally to the effort to obtain an improvement in the circulating medium. Last year the price of Mexican dollars varied from 64s per cent. below their metallic value to 6s above. Now surely a coin that at times sells below its metallic value and at other times rises far above it is open to grave objection as the principal circulating medium, and the effort to supplement it and in course of time to supplant it, with a coin of more stable value ought to command universal support. The fact that the fluctuations of the Mexican introduce an additional element of gambling into exchange operations cannot command that coin to any right-thinking man. If at times it makes exchange slightly higher than it ought to be according to the price of silver this state of things is only temporary, and the advantage it may afford to private persons having remittances to make much more than counterbalanced by the disorder it introduces into trade. Mr. GUILLAND says the request for a British silver-dollar has to be looked at from three points of view, namely, the bank, the bimetallic, the patriotic. But neither bimetallic nor patriotic considerations have had much to do with the present movement; it is simply as a matter of business that the demand is preferred. The inconvenience of the uncertainty in the value of the Mexican has been felt on all hands and the desire for an improvement in general. While our currency is supposed to be silver it is felt that the coin in general circulation should coincide with the value of silver plus cost of workmanship and should not be subject to fluctuations of an extraneous character. The Government, desiring promptly with the subject, has received the following reply:—Dwight, a rear-admiral, U.S.Navy:—In no event to you would we consent to the issue of a silver basis to keep exchange at the low water mark of silver. Well, so long as we are on a silver basis that is where exchange ought to be. Mr. GUILLAND advocates that we should go on a gold basis and that is an intelligible position to take up and maintain, but while we are on a silver basis to advocate that exchange ought to be subjected to fluctuations caused by gambling in Mexican dollars is absurd. The uncertainty in the value of the Mexican is, however, the only point that Mr. GUILLAND can make for it, and he appears to think it an advantage. To do away with it, he says, would lower exchange by about a penny. As a permanency it would do nothing for the kind, for whereas the Mexican is sometimes sold at its melting-pot value the British dollar could never be sold for less than the value of the silver it contains plus cost of minting.

The 14th inst. being Whit Monday, is to be observed as a holiday in the Government departments.

THE DAILY PRESS.

HONGKONG, MAY 7TH, 1894.

Mr. W. G. GUILLAND, in the letter which appears in the London and China Express of the 30th March, makes a vigorous onslaught on the proposed British dollar—the Bankers' dollar as it has been termed. He says the request for the British silver dollar has been engineered by the exchange banks, and the reason he states as follows:—“The object of the banks is clear; they can import ‘Mexicans and yen’ into the Straits, but only Mexicans in Hongkong. Why not meet the difficulty by making the law legal tender in Hongkong also? Because if the Japanese Specie Bank opens in the Colonies it will have some small advantage over the English Banks in dealing in the yen, while apart from this there is more loss in interest and a longer risk of exchange in sending the silver, to Japan and getting it back to Hongkong, and the Straits than in shipping the silver to Bombay and there having it coined en route to the Straits and China. It is a mere question of S. & L. with the banks; they can nothing for the Queen's head on any other head on the coin; all they want is two strings to their bow, and to be left free to buy whatever is cheapest.” We do not give the banks credit for being actuated by any higher motive than that of honest and intelligent self-interest, but in this instance the interests of the banks, the merchants, and the population of the Far East generally are identical, the only parties likely to be at all prejudiced being the Mexican Government and speculators on the London silver market. Mr. GUILLAND says the immediate effect of a British silver dollar will be to lower exchange by about one penny in the dollar. If this were true no doubt many people would with very good reason oppose the proposed new coin. But Mr. GUILLAND must have let the statement slip from his pen unthinking. The Mexican dollar has attained the position it now holds in the currency of the Far East by reason of its cheapness, and it cannot be credited with having upheld exchange except for brief periods at uncertain intervals. There has of late been a great scarcity of the coin which has increased its price, and it is the inconvenience of this uncertainty of value that has induced the banks and the mercantile community generally to the effort to obtain an improvement in the circulating medium. Last year the price of Mexican dollars varied from 64s per cent. below their metallic value to 6s above.

It is stated that Mr. J. O'Connor intends to produce about the end of June, “China Water” or “Guilland’s Water” at the Agricultural Hall, Islington.

The London and China Express learns that Mr. G. F. R. Allen is likely to receive the appointment of British Consul at Amoy. His present post is Consul at Taku.

According to the China News, the dispute between the Chinese Doctor, Hailan, and Messrs. Samuel & Co., of Kobe, which led to a boycott being placed upon the foreign firm by Japanese dealers, has been amicably settled.

Intelligence has been received in Yokohama that the captain and twenty men of the American sailing schooner Henry Davis, which recently grounded and became a wreck on Subibar Island, Nippon, have reached Hakodate.

The Singapore Free Press of the 30th April says:—“Among the passengers leaving to-day for Bangkok is Mr. M. N. of the Chinese Customs Service, who has been visiting this Colony and Java on behalf of his department. He will return to Hongkong via Salang and Haiphong en route.”

unavailability of the accommodation and in the almost total absence of properly trained teachers.

GRANT-IN-AID SCHOOLS.
For some years past it was felt that the Grant-in-Aid Schools had outgrown in many respects the Code of 1873, revised in 1879 and 1883. An annually increasing demand had arisen for the addition of several standard schools in the Colony, and the English Schools were added to the English Schools. In the former, there was further also a desire for the addition of arithmetic (as well as geography) to the ordinary pences of a "purely Chinese" curriculum. In the interest of the English Schools, pressed as they were of late by a growing demand for "the teaching subjects of the Chinese," a scheme of education revision, it was deemed necessary to widen the scope of the elementary side of the scheme. It was felt desirable that the graduation from the lowest to the highest standard should be made more even, particularly with regard to arithmetic and geography. Elementary science lessons, naturally included in the new scheme, were to be specially included among the examination subjects of the seventh standard. The regulations concerning special subjects also appeared to require revision so as to enlarge the range of the subjects open for selection whilst limiting the number of subjects to be taken up by each individual scholar. At the same time, however, the scheme of education demanded that the teaching of practical subjects, particularly involved in the addition of a seventh standard of the English Schools, should be balanced by a corresponding reduction of the values of passes and of the reputation granted in the case of the Chinese. After due consultation, and after much discussion, I drafted a revised code of regulations for the grant-in-aid points. This new code of regulation for Educational Grants-in-Aid (1892), having received the approval of the Government (Gazette of 19th August, 1892), will come into force on 1st January, 1894. Elementary education, having been dealt with, the next step will be the consideration of secondary education, the need for which is not far off by the mass of the Chinese population at present from year to year more heavily on the resident European families. The "pencils bitherto obtaining of sending children for purposes of secondary education to Europe, has of late become a more and more expensive, and many cases impossible, luxury. Hence the failure of special provision to be made for the peculiar wants of the education of European children."

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

The local examinations held in Hongkong for the College of Preceptors (July, 1892) resulted in a diploma of association and more diplomas granted to a master of Victoria College (3), a teacher of a Normal School (1), a candidate for the Diocesan School (1), and a certificate has since been issued to the successful candidate (Miss Berger), an assistant teacher in a "local" Grant-in-Aid School. The results of the annual Oxford Local Examinations, held in Hongkong in July 1892, under the Junior Division—Honours List, one; First Class, Diocesan School 4 passes; Victoria College 3 passes; Candidates 10, having exceeded the age of 16 years satisfied the Examiners—Diocesan School 3 passes; Victoria College 3 passes; Victoria English Girls' School 1 pass. Successful candidates who obtained distinction in religious knowledge, Diocesan School 1; Victoria English School 1; in English, Diocesan School 1; in Moral and Physical Education, results of Junior Division—First Prize—Diocesan School 32; passed in preliminary subjects 24; passed in English knowledge fully 14 parts 2; passed in Mathematics 12; passed in drawing 4; Total of certificates issued to candidates of proper age, 11; to candidates beyond the limit of age, 9. II. Second Division—List of Diocesan Schools 4 passes; Victoria College 3 passes; Candidates 10, having exceeded the age of 16 years satisfied the Examiners—Diocesan School 3 passes; Victoria College 3 passes; Victoria English Girls' School 1 pass. Successful candidates who obtained distinction in religious knowledge, Diocesan School 1; Victoria English School 1; in English, Diocesan School 1; Moral and Physical Education, results of Senior Division—First Prize—examined 14; passed in preliminary subjects 24; passed in English knowledge 4; passed in Mathematics 12; passed in natural sciences 1.
